Engaging Families

Research Shows Positive Outcomes!

Translating the Outcomes to the Roles & Functions of Family Organizations and Parent Peer Support

Research Shows ----

Positive outcomes are more likely to be achieved when family engagement is systemic, integrated and comprehensive

Outcome specifically related to father involvement:

- Improved achievement in school; Whitney, S., Prewett, S., Wang, Ze., and Hargin, C. (2017)
- Better overall emotional & social wellbeing; National Fatherhood Initiative
- Reduced likelihood for maltreatment; Bendheim-Thomas Center for Research on Child Wellbeing & Social Indicators Survey Center (2010)
- Less likely for teen pregnancy; Less likely for incarceration as juveniles; Source: National Fatherhood Initiative® 2019. Father Facts: Eighth Edition. Germantown, MD: National Fatherhood Initiative®
- Reduced infant mortality; Alio, A.P., Mbah, A.K., Kornosky, J.L., Washington, D., Marty, P.J., & Salihu, H.m. (2011)
- Reduces parenting stress for mothers; Teen males who live with fathers are less likely to carry guns & deal drugs; Reduced sibling discord: National Fatherhood Initiative <https://www.fatherhood.org/>

Outcomes from engaging families

- Reported benefits of family engagement for children, youth and families are compelling (Hoagwood, 2005), and include items on this and the following slides:
- Improved child and youth psychological adjustment, behavioral functioning and quality of life (Bellin, Osteen, Heffernan, Levy & Snyder-Vogel, 2011; Law et al., 2003a)
- Faster recovery process for mental health and addiction issues and reduced risk of mortality (Baker-Ericzén, Jenkins & Brookman-Frazee, 2010; CAMH, 2004; MacKean et al., 2012; Robst et al., 2013)
- Increased likelihood of medication compliance (CAMH, 2004; MacKean et al., 2012)
- Improved child and family management skills and functioning, including improved family interactions and increased stability of the family's living situation (Hoagwood, 2005; MacKean et al., 2012)
- Enhanced psychological well-being among parents and decreased parenting stress (Bellin et al., 2011; Dempsey & Keen, 2008; Law et al., 2003a; MacKean et al., 2012)

- Beyond its demonstrated benefits, family engagement is a practice with undeniable ethical relevance. Engaging family members in mental health care represents an example of citizen participation, defined as the right to “deliberat[e] on issues affecting one’s own life” (Fischer, 2000, p. 1), which is a fundamental element of democratic tradition (Ferreira et al., 2014). Indeed, having a voice and a role to play in decision-making that directly affects one’s own life is a defensible right (Ferreira et al., 2014).
- Increased caregiver feelings of competence and self-efficacy (Hoagwood, 2005; Davidson, Wiens & Anderson, 2010; Law et al., 2003a; Slaton, Cecil, Lambert, King & Pearson, 2012; Smith, Wohlstetter, Kuzin & De Pedro, 2011)
- Reduced rates of relapse (CAMH, 2004; MacKean et al., 2012)
- Improved satisfaction with care (Bellin et al., 2011; Davis, Claudius, Palinkas, Wong & Leslie, 2011; Dempsey & Keen, 2008; Koren, Paulson, Yatchmonoff, Gordon & DeChillo, 1997; Law et al., 2003a)
- Increased caregiver knowledge about child mental health issues (Hoagwood, 2005)
- Improved caregiver adjustment to the child’s mental health issues (Bellin et al., 2011; Law et al., 2003a).
- More effective use of resources and improved cost-effectiveness of services (CAMH, 2004; Institute for Patient and Family-Centered Care, 2009; MacKean et al., 2012)
- Earlier access to services and improved quality of care (CAMH, 2004; Institute for Patient and Family-Centered Care, 2009; MacKean et al., 2012; Osher, T. W., van Kammen, W. & Zaro, S. M., 2001; Tambuyzer & Van Audenhove, 2013)
- Reduced out-of-home treatment placements and shorter lengths of stay in residential care (Affronti & Levison-Johnson, 2009; MacKean et al., 2012)
- Reduced reliance on services (CAMH, 2004; MacKean et al., 2012)
- Increased satisfaction of staff in their professional career (CAMH, 2004; Institute for Patient and Family-Centered Care, 2009; MacKean et al., 2012; Manion & Smith, 2011).
- Because families are diverse, it is important to adapt services to fit individual families’ unique needs and preferences. When there is alignment between a family’s preferences for service and the service they actually receive, families tend to have longer and more successful involvement in services (Bannon & McKay, 2005; Miller & Prinz, 2003).
